Rallying the Party

Liz understands the importance of the President getting out and about - she has an impressive record of visiting local parties and helping in local campaigns....mixing with members, not living in the Westminster bubble. No longer a parliamentarian, she can virtually be a full-time president.

Unique experience

She has been an activist at every level in various regions: her experience is unique in having been a campaigner and council candidate in London, a PPC in the East of England, MP in Rochdale and MEP in the Midlands, fighting rural seats, urban seats and against Labour, against the Conservatives and against UKIP. She has worked hard to improve the involvement of women, people with disabilities and people with different ethnic backgrounds in the party...and she still delivers leaflets!

Dealing with the media

As the public face of the Liberal Democrats, the President needs to be media savvy in developing a positive image of the party. Liz has had extensive experience over the years of representing the party on national TV and radio including on Question Time and Newsnight and in the national newspapers. She also has a great deal of experience of local radio and weekly newspapers; regional TV and regional daily newspapers and of course, the ever-burgeoning social media.

Understanding the role

She understands that the President is the eyes and ears of the party - listening to members and representing their views to the leadership. She is aware that the President, elected by the membership, needs to work with the leader not for the leader. She has a vast amount of experience of chairing meetings and is very conscious of the fact that the structures of the Party need to be reformed as well as made more transparent. As she is independent of the Parliamentary Party and of any specific group, she is eminently suitable for the role of President and will act as a unifying force.

Winning for members

'A fighter for equality in all its guises'

'Liz Lynne has been a fighter for equality in all its guises for as long as I have known her. A well-regarded and successful MP, she carried her passion and abilities with strength into European politics and was able to speak in a language that non politicians understand. She is a woman with guts and integrity. That is why I am supporting her.'

FLO CLUCAS

'A fantastic president for uncertain times'

'Having known Liz for well over 20 years and having seen her commitment and hard work for the Party I know she would be a fantastic President for us as we move into an uncertain future'

BARONESS ANGIE HARRIS

'Liz's motto is Action this Day'

'Liz is an action woman. She has enormous energy and is already acting in the best interests of members by typically combining her campaign to be Party President with the grassroots campaigns being fought up and down the country. She is brilliant on the doorstep.'
